South Africa – an Evolution in Foreign Policy

Xolisa Mabhongo

South Africa's foreign policy has been evolving since the first democratic elections in 1994. The country plays a pivotal role in the African continent, contributing to peacemaking initiatives as well as development. At the same time South Africa has also pursued strategic partnerships with countries in different parts of the world. In addition to good bilateral relations with countries from all continents South Africa is a member of new formations such as the India Brazil South Africa (IBSA) partnership, a member of BRICS (Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa). Since 1994 the country has also played an influential role within the United Nations system because of its strong belief in multilateralism.

Xolisa Mabhongo is the Ambassador of the Republic of South Africa to Austria, Slovenia and Slovakia. His lecture will be in English language.
